

Over $100 million traded through Kantox API in first 6 months

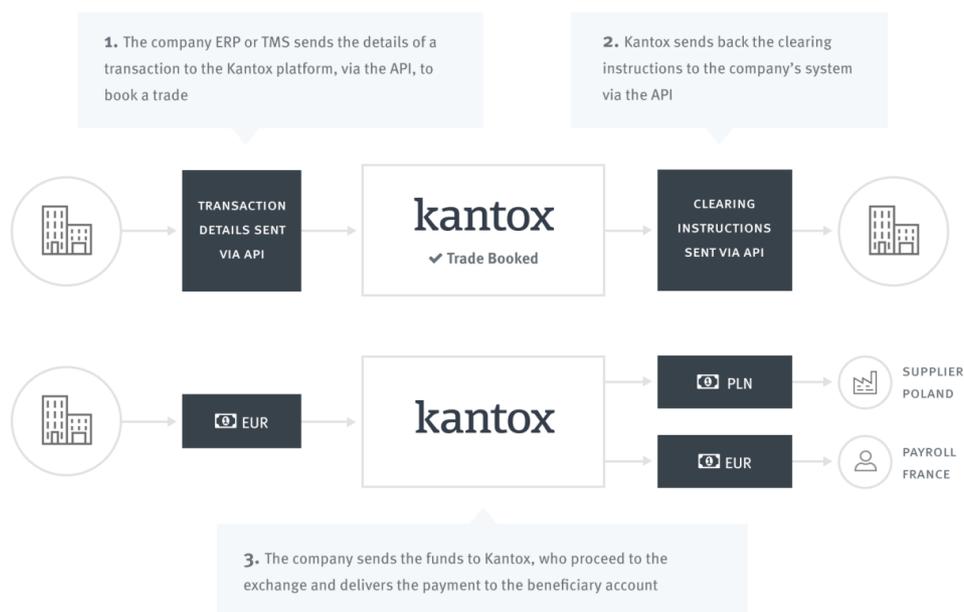

- The API connects Kantox's platform to clients' ERP or TMS to automate all currency transactions, execute their hedging strategy and/or make mass international payments

26th July, London-. At the end of 2015, Kantox launched its API, which was initially rolled out for use by a group of beta clients. Just over half a year on, thousands of transactions have been completed through the API and the total amount traded with this technology has already broken through the $100 million barrier. "Kantox delivers genuine added value by offering finance departments headache-free automation of currency management and execution of customised FX rate hedging strategies," explained Philippe Gelis, the fintech firm's co-founder and CEO.

Kantox's financial software development is always driven by companies' needs. As Gelis put it, "Our clients were looking for solutions to boost efficiency and productivity by improving their management of their exchange rate risk, currency operations and international payments." Kantox API is now available for all clients and can be integrated with their in-house systems in just a few days. Once this integration is complete, clients have full access to Kantox's various core services – from spot trades to forwards, market orders and international payments – as well as to advanced products such as Dynamic Hedging and the Payments Hub.

What is Kantox API?

Companies that need to frequently manage their FX exposure or process a high volume of international payments can integrate Kantox API with their enterprise resource planning (ERP) software or treasury management system (TMS) to automate each and every one of their transactions.

This integration provides benefits not only in terms of efficiency – with fewer hours spent on low-value-added tasks – but also by eliminating the mistakes that commonly occur when data is entered manually.
